Chapter I: What List Building is all about

▪ Definition

“List building” is an online marketing method used for collecting email addresses from customers and non-customers to engage them on a regular basis and get more traffic to your website. There are multiple ways in which you can use a mailing list for this purpose.

List building is the way of business or professional stays in touch using the internet: with an email address. It can be said that “list building” is a cheap and effective way of keeping and converting customers.

“List building” is an ongoing process that requires you to work your way up to an increasingly larger “mailing list”, one that adds customers and interested prospects over time, and there are many ways in which you can do it.

A “mailing list” is something that you build from getting traffic and word of mouth for your website, and by using all the means that you could get your hands on to build that list. In a way, you already know what “list building” is, so let’s help you use it to make money!

Where does it come from?

You have to remember that electronic commerce, or eCommerce, started as what was known as “online mail order”. It evolved from mail orders from catalogs and magazines from less sophisticated times.

The process was simple, and only needed you to check a physical or online catalog through a website, marking what you wanted to order and then sending out an email specifying those items, then getting back a response.

That’s where the “mailing list” was born. When companies had a significant number of returning customers, they realized that they could build a list of those email addresses provided by the customers.

Then, they used these mailing lists to send out catalogs and updates to customers. Soon, companies that had something to sell started to operate solely through mail orders, and it remained that way for a long time.

However, electronic commerce got refined, and companies started to develop tools that could be implemented into their websites for a streamlined shopping experience, like shopping carts and secure credit card processing systems.

That’s how “mailing lists” evolved from a method of doing business online to an online marketing method. With, mailing lists you can reach your audience without them having to visit your website.

- How can your offline business benefit?

You may ask yourself, why use a mailing list for doing business offline? With all of the ways that you can use to communicate and use as tools for setting up reminders, why even bother using email, the first technological platform that allowed online commerce to grow in the first place?

Well, the most obvious answer is because everybody has an email address, and it is the cheapest, most cost effective way in which you can keep in touch with your clients and prospective customers.

By building and managing a mailing list for your offline business activities, you can keep your customers engaged by sending them materials and reminders about what is going on around the block.

You can set up calendars for special offers, create weekly or monthly newsletters and even provide information about stuff that is not necessarily related to what you do, but about something that your customers might be interested in.

Building a mailing list for your offline business will also work as a reminder for your customers and prospects, because who are they going to think about when they need something like what you offer? The business without a mailing list or your up to date company?

▪ How can you benefit as an Independent Professional?

As an independent professional, you need to set up a mailing list and continually make it grow, because this will have a direct effect on how your clients perceive you. A mailing list will make you be perceived as someone who knows how to reach his or her customer base.

Building a mailing list can be useful for letting your clients know what are you up. You can create a newsletter with information, analyses and updates of what you did or how your activities have progressed in a particular timeframe.

An occasional informational email outside the normal mailing schedule can raise your clientele awareness of your activities when the content provided is relevant to them. Make sure to get to know your customers, so you can create a better rapport with them through your mailing list. Also, by knowing your clients, you can use targeted mail and send out specific content targeted to those customers that are interested in or whose professions and careers revolve around the kind of content you're sending them.

All of those strategies can be put to good use to make your clients wait for your regular emails. The benefits this will bring you are greater rates of returning customers and of converted users.

- How can you make money with it as an online marketer?

List building for online marketers is useful in the way that flyers and marketing on TV and radio is useful for traditional businesses. It is because it reminds people of the offers they may miss! By building an ever growing mailing list, online marketers can get their profits to sky rocket! The most useful way to engage through a mailing list as an online marketer is by sending out offers and updates on existing offers, rebates, lowering of prices and when something is being sold in bulk.

You can also direct traffic to your sites by sponsoring contests and prizes, like to give away an item that is being advertised on your site to the first customer that clicks it on that day. There are many ways in which you can build up suspense and excitement through a mailing list!

Chapter II: Why you should definitely use List Building for your Business today

List Building is an amazing tool that can help your business stay in touch. Below, are some amazing benefits, as well as some shocking facts that will help you get the most out of List Building on behalf of your business.

You built it, it's yours

One of the very best benefits of creating and building a mailing list is the freedom that it grants you to manage it. It might happen that you manage communications with your clientele pretty well through social media sites, but what if one of those social media sites goes out of fashion?

Social media platforms come and go, but email is prevalent. You have to also consider that while not everybody is on Facebook or Instagram, everybody using the internet has an email address, so it will always be good to capitalize on it. What's the first thing people check in the morning? Email!

It is simple to use, both for you and for your customers

One of the greatest advantages of using email to communicate with your customers is its straightforward nature. Just make sure you have great content to send, and you're done.

As for your clients, they might not know what a “hashtag” is, why they should comment on a picture, or maybe they're just not that interested in “liking” something on Facebook and will ignore your posts, but they sure do know how to click on an interesting piece of content that you just sent to them.

You also have the advantage of getting their focus. On blogs or social media sites, users can get distracted and lost among the amount of information that they are bombarded with... even stuff that is related to yours, which may even come from a competitor!

With email, they can read from top to bottom without turning their finger in another direction. They'll get your information in a condensed format that will only take them to where you want them to go!

It grants you exclusivity

When you think about what kind of content you want in your email inbox, or when you think about what individuals or companies you give your email address to, you don't think about it as a free for all, right?

You think about it as something sacred, since years and years of receiving email junk has taught you to not expose it willingly. You have to think that your customers think about their email inboxes exactly the same way.

It is better for creating reminders, making announcements and selling products

Mailing lists are very good for sending out information that you don't want to be buried under lots and lots of other trivial pieces of content. People check their emails daily, and you can reach them much more easily this way.

Reminders for events, offers, announcements, contests and miscellaneous news, like items back in stock, are best sent through email. Chances are you'll get an immediate response, especially if you get your customers used to looking for your emails!

It is cost effective

Booking and maintaining a mailing list is one of the cheapest ways to market across the board. You can use a regular service and even keep it free, or you can use a paid mailing list service and make use of better and more advanced features for keeping up with your customers.

This, of course, will depend on how you are planning to reach your customers, and to make sure they get the most out of the service.

It's private and can be targeted

One of the best things about a mailing list, and more specifically about using email, is the privacy aspect, which people care about a lot. It works both ways, because you can directly address somebody and he or she can do the same with you.

People prefer it this way, because they can ask you something or complain to you without it needing to be on a public wall or post. You can also create a channel that can be exclusively dedicated for this kind of communications, which customers will be thankful for!

You can also target emails to certain people or groups of people, hence knowing their preferences and habits will be crucial. This will enhance how you communicate with them, and in turn will also change how they perceive you.

Chapter V: Advanced List Building Strategies.

We showed you some strategies, tools and services that you can use to start a successful list building campaign, but you'll need to graduate from that at one time or another. Here you'll be presented with some advanced strategies that will go a little further.

By that, we mean they will help you shoot for the stars, because one thing is starting up your venture, and another is for your venture to stall.

You want to grow to 30,000 subscribers and more, not to stay with 3,000, right?

Here you have some of the best list building tactics recommended by some of the most successful email marketers around. They are called advanced because they're not assisted strategies, and you'll have to put in some effort to develop them, so let's get to work!

Work hard on your lead magnets, make them look like $50 books

This strategy will work with whatever kind of content you prepare to offer as a lead magnet. It translates into making it the best value that you can afford it to be. Don't make it cheap. Remember, your prospects are looking for VALUE.

For example, you can offer an eBook and say it was tagged at a credible price point, let's say $19, and now you're offering it for free to new subscribers. This will add value to your lead magnet, and will make your prospects know that you mean business.

Work on attracting more traffic

Attracting traffic to your website or blog to get visitors to your sign-up forms is not an easy task, and there will be a point when the classic bait tactics won't cut it anymore, at least not how you would like them to.

Some of the most advanced strategies that you can use include having you guest post on a known source. For this, you'll need to know your audience and know what other sites they visit on a daily basis. By being presented as a guest blogger, you can maximize your click through rate from other sites.

Another strategy to maximize incoming traffic to your website is to promote content about stuff that people consume, but always focused on the type of content that you publish on your website.

Chapter VI: 10 do's you have to apply for Successful List Building.

Some of the things that you can implement when using this powerful tool to grow your business are the following:

Personalize your emails

It goes without saying that first impressions matter, and this is triple important for emails. Quick question: What would you do if you subscribed to a company's email newsletter only to find out that their emails are kind of boring? Simple fonts, no backgrounds, no signatures, and so on.

What will happen is that you will ignore them, and eventually they'll automatically end up in your spam folder. This is exactly what would happen to your emails if you don't pay special attention to your email's presentation.

Of course, you need to be careful and limit personalization to the subject line and the first line of the message, or your email may seem forced or fake. Also, don't overshoot its design, just use something related to what you do as a business or professional.

Use blogging and Landing pages

Your mailing list will go as far as the means you use to market will take it. This means that you can't just use a corner of your website to show a sign up form and call it a day. What you really want is to get traffic, and put your mailing list out there.

You can do that by having a blog dedicated to content outside your website, with carefully structured information that can be used to get traffic from wherever you can and then insert a landing page with a call to action to join your mailing list.

Make good use of Lead Magnets

Lead magnets are teasers or incentives that you offer in a call to action to motivate your prospects to join your mailing list. The trick behind a lead magnet is giving away something that can only be obtained by joining your mailing list.

For example, giving away a free eBook, tips, or pieces of content that is not going to be published on the website and is exclusive, can be wonderful lead magnets.

Even if your prospects only sign up for the promise of a one-time free piece of content, they will be on your mailing list. From then on, it's up to you to keep them engaged.

Chapter VII: 10 don'ts you have to avoid for Successful List Building.

As useful and as popular as List Building is, there is a chance of having some problems when not used properly.

Incorrectly using it may have consequences that can be dangerous for your business or simply make your customers feel uncomfortable. Here, I show you 10 things you should not do:

Don't think about list building as a one-act task

List building is an ongoing effort. The process might be getting from A to B, but it hardly ever ends, because your mailing list needs to keep growing over time. You can't just create a mailing list with your first contacts and then just set them up for your newsletter.

What you really look for when you build a mailing list is to keep the influx of new subscribers coming, engaging them, and making them bring new people. You have to reinvent what you do with your mailing list from time to time and care for it. After all, this is your business!

Don't think about your mailing list as a short term recruiting tool

You just can't set up an offer to give something free for signing up to your mailing list as a method to lure in prospects, because you'll end up with a mailing list full of people deleting your messages after having got what they wanted from it.

Don't focus sales on everybody

One of the key words that successful marketers, salesman and saleswoman alike use for closing a deal is the word YOU.

Subscribers already gave exclusivity by granting you access to their inboxes. What they want is for you to talk to THEM individually.

What you have to do is sell in a personal manner, even if you're forwarding a promotional sales message to your 20,000 subscribers. Don't just talk about the product and the market. Talk about how YOU can benefit from getting what YOU are being offered.

Don't focus entirely on marketing somebody else's product

Let's face it, if you don't own a product, you'll be perceived as less trustworthy, as far as marketing efforts go. If you just focus on selling products and nothing else, especially if those products are from a third party, you'll be end up being seen as another internet marketing robot.

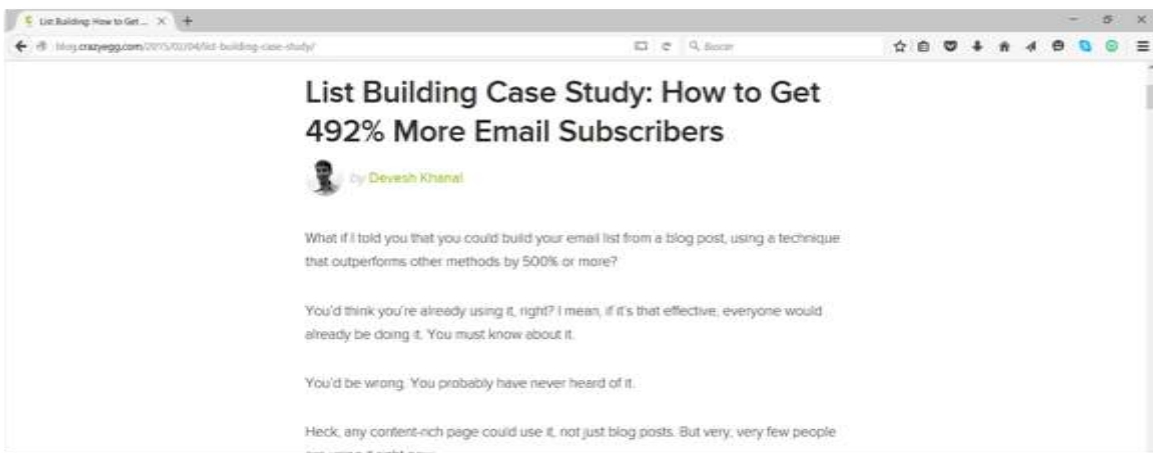

That's why you need to offer something that comes from you, something that you worked on that you don't have to ferociously advertise and maybe even lie about in order to make a quick profit.

Chapter VIII: Shocking List Building Case Studies.

Backlinko

Backlinko is a website dedicated to providing information about SEO, helping internet marketers with knowledge on how to improve their online marketing efforts.

Objective: To reach a significantly higher conversion rate from visitors reading their material and visitors signing up for their mailing list.

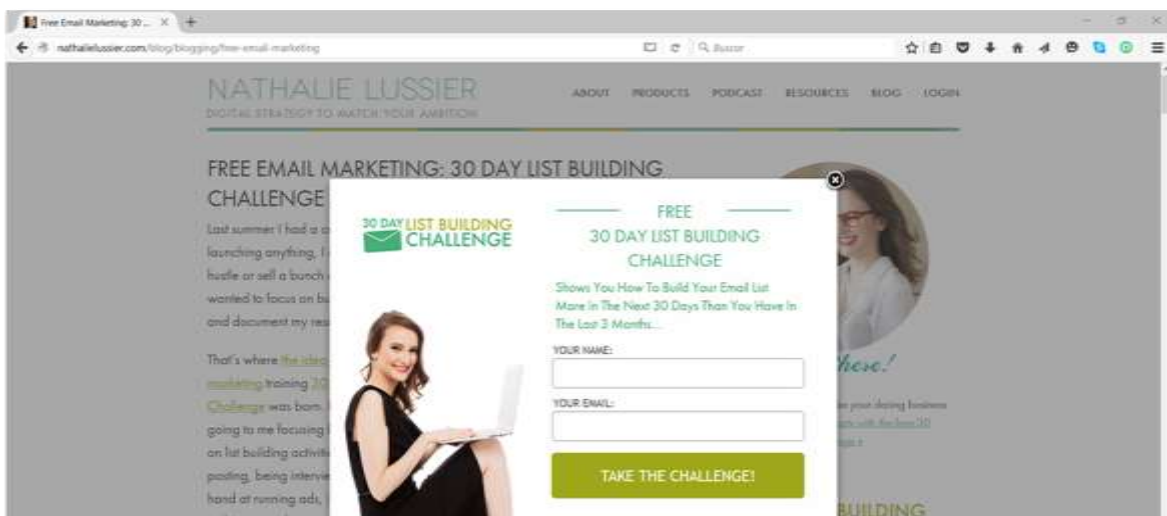

Strategy: The strategy used was pretty simple, yet sophisticated, and it consisted of offering “content upgrades” on each of their articles. They offered content upgrades to visitors in exchange for them signing up for their mailing list.

Backlinko tried two ways: one was by offering upgrades at the bottom of the articles, and the other was by offering upgrades at the top or in the middle of the page, and also at the bottom of the articles.

Results: What they found was that offering content upgrades at the bottom of the article helped them get new subscribers. What was surprising was how high the conversion rate got when offering the content upgrade at both the top and the middle of the article. It was an astonishing 300% conversion rate!

Nathalie Lussier

Nathalie Lussier is an American digital strategist that specializes in designing business strategies for companies venturing online.

Objective: Nathalie's objective centered around a challenge, where she and other online marketers would try to grow their lists, specifically hers, from 15,000 subscribers to 30,000 subscribers in a month.

Strategy: The strategy was based on an intensive routine of creating the largest number of list building materials that time could afford her and other contestants to create. She got inside her studio and during the span of one day created video material to market during a 30-day period.

Results: She got around 3,000 new subscribers, which aside from being far behind the initial 30,000 she wanted to achieve, wasn't bad at all.

What she learned was about what people are asking to have in their daily newsletters; more promotions, more videos and more multiplatform material.

Robbie Richards

Robbie Richards is a digital strategist working for the fastest growing tech companies around.

Objective: Richard's objective was to simply make his mailing list grow from zero subscribers to as many as he could get.

Strategy: Richard made good use of all the classic list building strategies that he could afford to use, like offering content upgrades In-Post using pop-up alerts, lead magnets and integrating widgets into his blog.

Results: He saw a rapid surge in the number of subscribers going from zero to 1,634 subscribers in the span of five months!
